About the seminar :

National progress is the ability of a nation to improve the lives of its citizens. Measures of improvement may be material, or social, such as literacy rates and availability of healthcare. A nation comprises of both men and women: in principle, both of the sexes are responsible for the prosperity and development of the state and nation.

Throughout history, the central role of women in society has ensured the stability, progress and long term development of nations. It is observed that across the globe, women constitute a very significant and indispensable portion of the population; therefore, it would be foolish to ignore them while planning for the national development and progress. Although a few countries, especially the developed ones, have appreciated and empowered to a large extent their women in order to play their roles and contribute their own quota to the development of their societies. Unfortunately the developing countries have not appreciated fully the important roles women can play in the transformation of their countries when empowered. Women have the potential of turning an ailing economy at the family, local, state or national levels, through their inbred economic strength, organizational skills and single minded focus to surmount obstacles posed by the environment, culture and stronger partners.

Swami Vivekananda have stated that there is no chance for the welfare of the world unless the condition of women is improved. It is not possible for a bird to fly on only one wing." In India, our constitution framers ensured that the Principle of Gender Equality is enshrined in the Indian Constitution in its Preamble, Fundamental duties and Directive Principles. The Constitution also empowers the states to adopt measures of positive discrimination in favour of women. The establishment of National Women's Commission and State Women's Commissions were important milestones in the direction of Women Empowerment in India. Further the draft National Policy for the Empowerment of women (2016) marks an important step taken by the Government for accelerating the pace of women empowerment. However development is not sustainable if it is unequal. Despite significant government and non-government initiatives the fact remains that we still witness dowry deaths, domestic violence and exploitation of women. Empowerment of women and girls is not only important for an equitable society, it is essential to build stronger economies, achieve internationally agreed –upon development goals, and improve the quality of life of women, men, families and communities thereby ensuring national progress.

The present one day seminar envisages a meaningful dialogue, discourse and deliberation on the role of women in the progress of nation and the strategies to empower women.
